TAYLOR NEED NOT PAY $10,000 TO GIRL

Plaintiff, in her Teens, for Several Years has been Trying to get Money Out of Defendant, Old, Feeble and Nearly Blind—William F. Taylor Successfully Resists Breach of Promise Suit of Josephine Oldeski—Defendant a Resident of Hatboro.

William Taylor, of Moreland avenue, Hatboro, spent most of this week in Honesdale, where he went to answer a suit for $10,000 damages, instituted by 20-year-old Miss Josephine Oldeski for alleged breach of promise of marriage.

The jury decided in Mr. Taylor's favor.

As Mr. Taylor is over 70 years old and is almost blind, so much so as to require an attendant in his walks about the borough, the allegations of the plaintiff are at least surprising. Mr. Taylor is a widower, without children and has lived in Hatboro for several years, having purchased the residence of Conly Walton. He has a housekeeper, Mrs. Fesmire and her son is his secretary.

According to Miss Oldeski's story, the old man wooed her when she was only a little more than 14 years old and then jilted her.

Taylor amassed a fortune as a coal operator in West Virginia, and several years ago, when his eyesight failed, he purchased a summer hotel near Honesdale. His sister lived with him for a time. After her death Miss Oldeski, who is the daughter of a Polish laborer of Prompton, was engaged to do the household work. She was then in short dresses.

After the girl had been in Taylor's employ for a time she told her father that the old man had deceived her under promise of marriage, and Oldeski had him arrested on a criminal charge. Later suit was brought for $10,000 damages.

Both of these actions were decided in Taylor's favor many months ago. Now comes this suit for breach of promise.

Although acquitted of the criminal charge, Taylor, who is said to be deeply religious, was so mortified by the publicity given him that he moved from Honesdale to Hatboro, deeding the hotel to the Christian Alliance Society.

The old man did not again return to Honesdale until a few days ago, when it was necessary for him to appear there to be in readiness for the present trial.

Before Judge Searle the girl maintained that she still passionately loves the aged and infirm suitor. Her 12-year-old sister testified she heard the proposal. When the case was heard by arbitrators some time ago, a decision was rendered in favor of Taylor.

The allegation of the defense is that the 20-year-old plaintiff is merely the tool of a designing party.

Mrs. Paul Oldeski, the girl's father, declared that "the old man," meaning Taylor, has too much money and he intended to get some of it. To get at least $25,000 from him," Oldeski is alleged to have said.

Another point scored by the defense is the offering of a letter said to have been written by the girl to her old wooer since the suit began. "I all my father's doings," reads the letter, "and if I do get any money in suit, I'll pay it back to you."

Another paragraph of the letter the girl declares that her father compelled her to bring suit.

It was also testified by several witnesses that the girl's reputation for virtue is not good.

Thursday the jury decided that the heart of Miss Josephine Oldeski had not been wounded to the extent of $10,000 by the alleged love-making of Taylor, and rendered a verdict for the defendant. This is the third time that the old man has emerged victorious from litigation said to be created by the girl's father.

The jury was one of nearly twenty-four years, because a juror who answered to the name of John Waltz insisted that the girl is entitled to some of the money.

"Old men mustn't forget that a woman's word is as good as two men's," Waltz is alleged to have told his colleagues.

But before the verdict was returned, the jury filed into court and very solemnly seated themselves in the box.

"We want additional instructions, your honor," said Foreman Shear.

"Well, what is it?" inquired the court.

"We want to know if there is anything in the old saying that a woman's word is as good as two men's," said the foreman.

"No, no is not," said the court, decisively, and the twelve filed back to the jury room.

The card is white with red printing. The stamp is a profile head of Abraham Lincoln, looking to the left.

"NATOMA," AN AMERICAN GRAND OPERA, MUSIC BY VICTOR HERBERT

Libretto by Joseph D. Redding, a Lawyer of New York and San Francisco—Story of the Opera—Victor Herbert Tells of the Music—Founded Upon Indian Theme—Scene in California.

Hundreds of readers of the Public Spirit, who have become acquainted with Victor Herbert and his music at Willow Grove Park, will be interested in the following description of his new opera "Natoma," which is shortly to be produced in the Metropolitan Opera House, Philadelphia.

Mr. Herbert and Joseph D. Redding, who wrote the libretto, have been in Philadelphia preparing for the introductory performance.

Last Saturday evening they, with Mary Garden, occupied a box at the Metropolitan Opera House, and heard the singers, who are to take the principle parts in Natoma. Mary Garden is to take the part of Natoma, the Indian maiden. It is said of Miss Garden that she listened to a piano reading of the score much against her will. At the end of the first act she expressed herself as delighted with the work, and at the end of the second she exclaimed "There is no question of my not going it. I am already planning it out in my own mind."

John McCormack is to sing the role of the tenor lover, Paul; Mario Sammarco is to be the Spanish-American, Alvarado; Gustave Huberdeau will take the part of the father, Don Francesco; Hector Dufranne will be the priest, Father Peralta; Miss Lillian Grenville will sing the part of Barbara, and Armand Crabbe is to be Pico. Cleofonte Campanini will conduct the orchestra and the opera will be staged in lavish style by the Metropolitan management, and presented under the most brilliant auspices possible.

Speaking of his new opera Victor Herbert said: "In writing Natoma, I have followed the course which seems

A special meeting of the Willow Grove Improvement Association has been called for this Friday evening at the club house, when permanent officers will be nominated and other business pertaining to the welfare of the association, will be considered. The Improvement Association will fill a long felt want in this place, as its prospects of ever becoming a borough, sandwiched in, as it is, between two townships like Abington and Moreland, are very slight. Sidewalks and street lamps are among the questions which should be first agitated, and go a long way to the general betterment of the town and advancement of real estate values. Every public spirited citizen of the village should attend this meeting and voice their sentiments for the betterment of the town.

CUPID HELPED MEND TIRE

Gallantry When Auto Was Disabled Resulted in Wedding.

James Foy, of Lincoln drive and Tulpehocken street, Philadelphia, and Miss Lydia Smith, of Flourtown, were married at the Church of St. Vincent de Paul, in East Price street, Philadelphia, by the Rev. William F. Maddock.

The bride was attended by Miss Emily Morrow, of Chestnut Hill, and the best man was Thomas Coupe, of Germantown. Immediately following the wedding the couple started on a trip to Florida.

The marriage is the culmination of a romance which began last summer. Mr. Foy was driving in his automobile near Fort Washington, when he came upon Miss Smith, who was repairing a tire which had been punctured on her automobile. Seeing that she had a task that was too much for her, Mr. Foy offered his assistance.

David Roberts and son, of Gwynedd Valley, will engage in the contracting business in the spring in Fort Washington. They will supply builders with first-class building stone and also stone for road purposes.

WOMAN ARRESTED ON BIGAMY CHARGE

Wealthy Resident of Melrose Park Taken by Police to City Hall—Released on Bail—Charge Made by Her Husband, George A. Stewart, that His Wife has Earlier Husband Living—Suits and Cross Suits Coming.

Mrs. Stewart or Mathes, recently instituted a divorce suit against her husband, Stewart, and this suit is pending in the Philadelphia courts.

The history of the Stewarts' unhappy marital relationship, beginning with the elopement of the woman with Mathes, covers a period of 28 years, and reads like a romantic novel. The story has become public because of the fact that when Stewart's mother died in August, 1903, she left to Ella Stewart, her son's wife, all her property, constituted principally of real estate said to be worth nearly $100,000. It is in an effort to gain possession of the estate left by his mother that Stewart took the step of instituting an action in ejectment against his wife, supplementing this by obtaining an indictment against her charging bigamy.

Mrs. Ella A. Mathes was arrested at her home on Chestnut avenue, Melrose Park, a suburb near Oak Lane, Wednesday afternoon as a fugitive from Camden on a charge of bigamy. The warrant was sworn out by City Hall Detective Emanuel before Magistrate Scott, and was served by Emanuel Special Policeman Lee, of the Germantown police station, and Detective Carroll, of Camden.

The woman had been living at the Melrose Park house for three weeks under the name of Mrs. Samuel B. Stewart. The house is one of the most beautiful in the suburb, and is richly furnished. The woman had three servants, one of them a negro butler. When arrested she wore an expensive gown and was bedecked with diamonds. On paintings of the estimated value of $80,000 or $90,000 covered the walls of the house. She also had an automobile.

Mrs. Mathes was taken to the city hall. She summoned one of her counsel, ex-Judge James Gay Gordon, who communicated with Judge Barratt, of Quarter Sessions Court, Judge Barratt released Mrs. Mathes in $2500 bail about two hours after her arrest.

The bail bond was signed by Harry L. Hidson, a furniture dealer, of 3222 Ridge avenue, who gave as security two properties valued at $16,000.

According to the bills she was married to Albert E. Mathes, in Tampa, Florida, in 1892, 18 years ago, and subsequently in 1902, married Samuel B. Stewart, then a wealthy butcher of Philadelphia, who afterward moved to Camden. No one seems to know where he lives now, and the whereabouts of Mathes is also unknown.

Stewart, the alleged second husband, appeared before the Grand Jury in Camden on Monday, and it was on his evidence that Mrs. Mathes was indicted. A bench warrant was issued by Justice Garrison, of Camden.

The defendant gave her age as 54 years.

The case will not end with the divorce proceedings the experts at suits and the trial of the woman for bigamy, according to hints given out by the lawyers interested in the case from both sides, for Stewart, in his anxiety to get possession of the estate, is claimed, has made himself liable to an action against him based on perjury in the matter of the will.

Thus far Stewart has had the advantage of being successful in having the jurors in both the civil and criminal actions he instituted served upon Mrs. Stewart, while he has kept out of range of his wife's attorneys in their efforts to serve the summons in the divorce suit she has brought.

Mrs. Stewart, now out on bail, has returned to her Melrose Park home and is awaiting developments.

Horace Groskin, real estate broker, has purchased for a client, a plot of ground at Old York road and Clarkson avenue, adjoining the Jewish Hospital. Part of the lot will be used as a site for an apartment-house.

Horace G. Reeder has sold for Charles Mawson, his desirable residence on South Chancellor street, Newtown, to Leroy Suber, teller in the First National Bank. Mr. Suber takes possession of his new purchase on April 1st, next. Mr. Mawson has purchased a house in Philadelphia and will move there in the near future.

NORTH WALES ENLARGED.

As no remonstrances or objections have been made to the proposed annexation of a portion of Upper Gwynedd township by the borough of North Wales, and as all the legislative requirements have been complied with, the outlying district, according to the borough's solicitor, J. B. Larzelere, is now a part of the borough.

The boundary lines of the annexed district includes an area nearly as large as the former limits of the borough. As the estimated valuation of the new property is about $100,000, the borough will receive about $600 and the school board about $800 additional in taxes.

WILL FREE TOLL ROADS, MAYBE.

State Highway Department Also to be Reorganized if Bill Passes Legislature.

One of the most important bills affecting the public highways of the State to be introduced in the Legislature this session was presented in the Senate at Harrisburg last Monday night by Mr. Thomson, of Chester county.

The bill abolishes the present Highway Commissioner's office and provides for the creation of a State Highway Board of three members, to be known as directors of public roads and highways. One of the directors shall be an engineer. Each shall receive a salary of $8000 a year. They will have complete supervision in the matter of building and improving highways and will award all contracts. Under the present law only the Highway Commissioner has the authority to award contracts.

The directors will serve four years. The bill provides that they shall review all existing laws on roads and to recommend legislation to the next Legislature repealing all conflicting laws.

Mr. Thomson also presented a bill abolishing all toll roads in the State. The bill carries an appropriation of $2,000,000 to acquire all of the 720 miles of toll roads now in the State.

THREE AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENTS

Man Thrown From Carriage When Animal Bolts From Passing Machine.

One man was injured, a horse killed and two automobiles badly damaged in automobile accidents last Sunday.

Charles Butler, 52 years old, of 135 East Gorgas Lane, was driving down Stenton avenue when at Gorgas lane his horse took fright at a passing automobile and ran away. Butler was thrown out of the carriage, striking a post with his head. He was taken to the Germantown Hospital with contusions and lacerations and probable internal injuries. The automobile did not stop.

While Edward S. Davis, of New Hope, Pa., was leading a horse out Old York road at 65th avenue early Sunday morning, an automobile going at high speed crashed into the frightened horse, killing it instantly. Davis had a narrow escape from serious injury.

An automobile owned and driven by Dr. George Smith, of 5538 Wayne avenue, Germantown, crashed into a motorcar owned by Mrs. B. R. Marsden, of 8811 Germantown avenue, and driven by Thomas Carroll, at Coulter street and Pulaski avenue. The two men were the only occupants of the machines at the time. Neither was injured. Doctor Smith was going north on Pulaski avenue and Carroll was driving west on Coulter street. Both machines were badly smashed.

The Fort Washington Fire Company has just expended $450 for equipment, and all financial obligations of the company have been discharged.

AMERICA AND CHINA.

"America and China are now bound together," writes Frederick McCormick in an article on "How America Got Into Manchuria," in the February "Century," "first by common recognition of the necessity to China of independence, integrity of territory and jurisdiction, and freedom of development and trade, to the promotion of which America is committed; and, second, by reason of common rewards and rebuffs sustained in promoting China's policy and America's diplomacy. Together with the invasion of the Hu-kuang loan, the imperial sanction to the Kin-chau-Aigun contract completes America's entry into the Chinese empire. It supplies the desired basis, and displays the unprecedented opportunity achieved for American commerce and trade and for American influence in eastern Asia by President Taft and Secretary Knox within the short period of two years."

A Bird of Bagdad

Strange Adventure of a Modern Haroun-al-Raschid

By O. HENRY

Copyright, 1910, by Doubleday, Page & Co.

Without doubt much of the spirit and genius of the Caliph Haroun-al-Raschid descended to the Margrave August Michael von Paulsen Quigg.

Quigg's restaurant is in Fourth avenue—that street that the city seems to have forgotten in its growth. Fourth avenue—born and bred in the Bowery—staggers northward full of good resolutions.

Where it crosses Fourteenth street it struts for a brief moment proudly in the glare of the museums and cheap theaters. It may yet become a fit mate for its highborn sister boulevard to the west or its roaring, polyglot, broad waisted cousin to the east. It passes Union square, and here the hoofs of the dray horses seem to thunder in unison, recalling the tread of marching hosts—hooray! And next—poor Fourth avenue—the street glides into a medieval solitude. On each side are the shops devoted to "antiques."

What street could live inclosed by these mortuary relics and trod by these spectral citizens, in whose sunken hearts scarce one good whoop or tra-la-la remained?

Not Fourth avenue; not after the tinsel but enlivening glories of the little Rialto; not after the echoing drumbeats of Union square. There need be no tears, ladies and gentlemen; 'tis but the suicide of a street. With a shriek and a crash Fourth avenue dives headlong into the tunnel at Thirty-fourth and is never seen again.

Near the sad scene of the thoroughfare's dissolution stood the modest restaurant of Quigg. It stands there yet if you care to view its crumbling red brick front, its show window heaped with oranges, tomatoes, layer cakes, pies, canned asparagus.

Quigg's title came through his mother. One of her ancestors was a margravine of Saxony. His father was a Tammany brave. On account of the dilution of his heredity he found that he could neither become a reigning potentate nor get a job in the city hall. So he opened a restaurant. He was a man full of thought and reading. The business gave him a living, though he gave it little attention. One side of his house bequeathed to him a poetic and romantic nature. The other gave him the restless spirit that made him seek adventure. By day he was Quigg, the restaurateur. By night he was the margrave, the caliph, the prince of Bohemia, going about the city in search of the odd, the mysterious, the inexplicable, the recondite.

One night at 9, at which hour the restaurant closed, Quigg set forth upon his quest. There was a mingling of the foreign, the military and the artistic in his appearance as he buttoned his coat high up under his short trimmed brown and gray beard and turned westward toward the more central life conduits of the city. In his pocket he had stored an assortment of cards written upon, without which he never stirred out of doors. Each of those cards was good at his own restaurant for its face value. Some called simply for a bowl of soup or sandwiches and coffee; others entitled their bearer to one, two, three or more days of full meals; a few were for single regular meals; a very few were in effect meal tickets good for a week.

"I'LL SPIEL IT IN ABOUT NINE WORDS."

Of riches and power Margrave Quigg had none, but he had a caliph's heart. It may be forgiven him if his head fell short of the measure of Haroun-al-Raschid's.

Continuing his progress in search of romance to divert him or of distress that he might aid, Quigg became aware of a fast gathering crowd that whooped and fought and eddied at a corner of Broadway and the crosstown street that he was traversing. Hurrying to the spot, he beheld a young man in exceedingly melancholy and precipitated demeanor engaged in the crime of cutting silver money from his pockets to the middle of the street. With each motion of the generous one's hand the crowd huddled upon the falling largesse with yells of joy. Traffic was suspended. A policeman in the center of the mob stooped often to the ground as he urged the blockaders to move on.

The margrave saw at a glance that here was food for his hunger after knowledge concerning abnormal workings of the human heart. He made his way swiftly to the young man's side and took his arm. "Come with me at once," he said in the low but commanding voice that his waiters had learned to fear.

"Pinched," remarked the young man, looking up at him with expressionless eyes—"pinched by a painless dentist. Take me away and give me gas. Some lay eggs and some lay none. When is a hen?"

Still deeply seized by some inward grief, but tractable, he allowed Quigg to lead him away and down the street to a little park.

There, seated on a bench, he upon whom a corner of the great caliph's mantle has descended spake with kindness and discretion, seeking to know what evil had come upon the other, disturbing his soul and driving him to such ill considered and ruinous waste of his substance and stores.

"I was doing the Monte Cristo act as adapted by Pompton, N. J., wasn't I?" asked the young man.

"You were throwing small coins into the street for the people to scramble after," said the margrave.

"That's it. You buy all the beer you can hold, and then you throw chicken feed to— Oh, curse that word chicken, and hens, feathers, roosters, eggs and everything connected with it!"

"Young sir," said the margrave kindly, but with dignity, "though I do not ask your confidence, I invite it. I know the world, and I know humanity. Man is my study, though I do not eye him as the scientist eyes a beetle or as the philanthropist gazes at the objects of his bounty—through a veil of theory and ignorance. It is my pleasure and distraction to interest myself in the peculiar and complicated misfortunes that life in a great city visits upon my fellow men. You may be familiar with the history of that glorious and immortal ruler, the Caliph Haroun-al-Raschid, whose wise and beneficent excursions among his people in the city of Bagdad secured him the privilege of relieving so much of their distress. In my humble way I walk in his footsteps. I seek for romance and adventure in city streets, not in ruined castles or in crumbling palaces. To me the greatest marvels of magic are those that take place in men's hearts when acted upon by the furious and diverse forces of a crowded population. In your strange behavior this evening I fancy a story lurks. I read in your act something deeper than the wanton wastefulness of a spendthrift. I observe in your countenance the certain traces of consuming grief or despair. I repeat—I invite your confidence. I am not without some power to alleviate and advise. Will you not trust me?"

"Gee, how you talk!" exclaimed the young man, a gleam of admiration supplanting for a moment the dull sadness of his eyes. "You've got the Astor library skinned to a synopsis of preceding chapters. I mind that old Turk you speak of. I read 'The Arabian Nights' when I was a kid. He was a kind of Bill Devery and Charlie Schwab rolled into one. But, say, you might have enchanted dish rags and make copper bottles smoke up coon giants all night without ever touching me. My case won't yield to that kind of treatment."

"If I could hear your story," said the margrave, with his lofty, serious smile.

THE STORY OF THE YOUNG MAN AND THE HARNESSMAKER'S RIDDLE

"I'll spiel it in about nine words," said the young man, with a deep sigh, "but I don't think you can help me any. Unless you're a peach at guessing it's back to the Bosporus for you on your magic linoleum.

"I work in Hildebrant's saddle and harness shop down in Grand street. I've worked there five years. I get $18 a week. That's enough to marry on, ain't it? Well, I'm not going to get married. Old Hildebrant is one of these funny Dutchmen—you know the kind—always getting off bum jokes. He's got about a million riddles and things that he faked from Rogers brothers' great-grandfather. Bill Watson works there too. Me and Bill have to stand for them chestnuts day after day. Why do we do it? Well, jobs ain't to be picked off every Anheuser bush—And then there's Laura.

"What? The old man's daughter. Comes in the shop every day. About nineteen and the picture of the blond that sits on the palisades of the Rhine and charms the glam diggers into the surf. Hair the color of straw matting and eyes as black and shiny as the best harness blacking. Think of that!

"Me? Well, it's either me or Bill Watson. She treats us both equal. Bill is all to the psychopathic about her. And me? Well, you saw me plating the roadbed of the Great Maroon Way with silver tonight. That was on account of Laura. I was splitcated, your highness, and I wot not of what I wouldst.

"How? Why, old Hildebrant says to me and Bill this afternoon: 'Boys, one riddle have I for you gehabt haben. A young man who cannot riddles antworten, he is not so good by business for ein family to provide— t that—bein?' And he hands us a riddle—a conundrum, you call it—and he chuckles interestly and gives both of us till tomorrow morning to work out the answer to it. And he says whichever of us guesses the repartee end of it goes to his house o' Wednesday night to his daughter's birthday party. And it means Laura for whichever of us goes, for she's naturally aching for a husband, and it's either me or Bill Watson, for old Hildebrant likes us both and wants her to marry somebody that'll carry on the business after he's stitched his last pair of traces.

"The riddle? Why, it was this: 'What kind of a hen lays the longest?' Think of that! What kind of a hen lays the longest? Ain't it like a Dutchman to risk a man's happiness on a fool proposition like that? Now, what's the use? What I don't know about hens would fill several incubators. You say you're giving imitations of the old Arab guy that gave away libraries in Bagdad. Well, now, can you whistle up a fairy that'll solve this hen query or not?"

When the young man ceased the margrave arose and paced to and fro by the park bench for several minutes. Finally he sat again and said in grave and impressive tones:

"I must confess, sir, that during the eight years that I have spent in search of adventure and in relieving distress I have never encountered a more interesting or a more perplexing case. I fear that I have overlooked hens in my researches and observations. As to their habits, their times and manner of laying, their many varieties and crossbreedings, their span of life, their—"

"Oh, don't make an Ibsen drama of it!" interrupted the young man flippantly. "Riddles—especially old Hildebrant's riddles—don't have to be worked out seriously. They are light themes such as Sim Ford and Harry Thurston Peck like to handle. But, somehow, I can't strike just the answer. Bill Watson may, and he may not. Tomorrow will tell. Well, your majesty, I'm glad anyhow that you butted in and whiled the time away. I guess Mr. Al-Rashid himself would have bounced back if one of his constituents had conducted him up against this riddle. I'll say good night. Peace fo' yours and what-you-may-call-its of Allah."

The margrave, with a gloomy air, held out his hand.

"I cannot express my regret," he said sadly. "Never before have I found myself unable to assist in some way. 'What kind of a hen lays the longest?' It is a baffling problem. There is a hen, I believe, called the Plymouth Rock that'—"

"Cut it out," said the young man. "The caliph trade is a mighty serious one. I don't suppose you'd even see anything funny in a preacher's defense of John D. Rockefeller. Well, good night, your nibs."

From habit the margrave began to fumble in his pockets. He drew forth a card and handed it to the young man.

"Do me the favor to accept this, anyhow," he said. "The time may come when it might be of use to you."

"Thanks!" said the young man, pocketing it carelessly. "My name is Simmons."

* * * * * * *

Shame to him who would hint that the reader's interest shall altogether pursue the Margrave August Michael von Paulsen Quigg. I am indeed astray if my hand fall in keeping the key to whose my perruser's heart would follow. Then let us on the morrow peep quickly in at the door of Hildebrant, harnessmaker.

Hildebrant's 200 pounds reposed on a bench, silver buckling a raw leather martingale.

Bill Watson came in first.

"Vell," said Hildebrant, shaking all over with the vile conceit of the joke maker, "haf you guessed him—Vat kind of a hen lays der longest?"

"Er—why, I think so," said Bill, rubbing a servile chin. "I think so, Mr. Hildebrant—the one that lives the longest— Is that right?"

"Nein!" said Hildebrant, shaking his head violently. "You haf not guessed der answer."

Bill paused on and donned a bedtick apron and bachelorhood.

In came the young man of the "Arabian Nights" fiasco—pale, melancholy, hopeless.

"Vell," said Hildebrant, "haf you guessed him— Vat kind of a hen lays der longest?"

Simmons regarded him with dull savagery in his eye. Should he curse this mountain of per· · humor—curse him and die? Why should—But there was Laura.

Dogged, speechless, he thrust his hands into his coat pockets and stood. His hand encountered the strange touch of the margrave's card. He drew it out and looked at it as men about to be hanged look at a crawling fly. There was written on it in Quigg's bold, round hand, "Good for one roast chicken to bearer."

Simmons looked up with a flashing eye.

"A dead one!" said he.

"Goot!" roared Hildebrant, rocking the table with giant glee. "Dot is right! You gome at mine house at 8 o'clock to der party."

ALL A MISTAKE.

By Which a Man Escapes One Bondage to Fall Into Another.

By EDWARD C. HANCOCK.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

I reached my destination at 11 o'clock at night, was driven to the L. hotel, was shown to my room and went to bed. The next morning I did not return to the room after breakfast, but did so at noon. An important matter of business absorbed my attention, and I was unmindful of everything else. My key did not work in the lock; but, turning the knob, the door opened. I concluded that either I or the maid who had put the room in order had left it unlocked.

Still thinking on other matters, I saw on the mantel a package done up in paper. It was about three inches long by two broad and an inch thick. At another time I would have examined it; but, with my mind full of business, I concluded it to be one of a number of small parcels I had taken out of my suit case when making my toilet in the morning, so I put it in my coat pocket.

Going to the stand to wash my hands, I discovered lying on it a ring set with two large diamonds.

I dropped my business matter and fixed my attention on the ring. Then I looked about the room. There was a trunk in it that was not mine. A wardrobe stood open, and I could see within articles of woman's apparel. I had got into the wrong room.

Had the ring not thus been exposed I would have simply retired. As it was, if I should be seen leaving the room and a thief should appropriate the jewelry I would be suspected of having stolen it. I concluded to take it to the office.

As I was leaving to do so I met a lady about to enter. She looked at me, flushed and asked:

"What were you doing in my room?"

Before I had time to reply she called a porter who was passing and said:

"Hold that man till I go into my room and see if anything is missing."

She ran into the room while the porter kept me under observation.

"It's gone," I heard her say, and, coming out, she told the porter that she had left a diamond ring on the washstand and I had taken it.

"Pardon me," I said. "I got into the wrong room. I found your ring on the washstand and was taking it to the office. Here it is."

"THAT'S A LIKELY STORY," SAID THE PORTER.

"That's a likely story," said the porter.

We three went to the office, where my explanation was listened to with evident distrust. But the young lady, having secured her ring, was not minded to press the matter, and it was dropped, but not for long. In half an hour, while I was sitting near the hotel entrance, a policeman entered, the clerk pointed to me, and I was taken into custody.

I was led to the police station to answer to a charge of robbery and, fortunately having evidences of property with me, was enabled to give bail for my appearance the next day. Returning to the hotel, I asked the clerk why the matter was to be pushed. He replied that the lady had missed something else—she would not say what—and it had made her very angry. I tried to think of something I had misappropriated besides the ring, but could remember nothing. Later, upon putting my hand in my pocket for my handkerchief, I took out the little package I had found on the mantel. I went to my room—my own room this time—uncovered the package and displayed a bundle of letters.

Having convinced myself from the address on one of them that they were not mine, I wrapped them up again and put them back in my pocket.

I made up my mind that there was a story in these letters which was running counter to the story of my having inadvertently come into possession of them. I was to be tried for stealing the ring and perhaps would not be able to prove my innocense. Indeed, appearances were much against me. Might not these letters be used to induce the lady to withdraw her charge? I had no sooner thought of this than I took them to the office of an acquaintance and put them in his safe. I did not wish them to be recovered by search.

As soon as I had done this I wrote my accuser a note telling her that I had inadvertently appropriated some letters belonging to her and that she might have them by withdrawing her charge against me. She had become so sure that I was a professional thief that she wrote back stating that she would withdraw the charge and give me $500 for the letters. I wrote her that I did not ask money for the letters and that she was welcome to them if she would withdraw her charge against me. To this she acceded, and instead of sending some one to me with an order for them she appointed a meeting with me in one of the hotel parlors. I did not propose to be outdone by a woman, so I left the letters where I had put them.

We met as agreed. The lady was not over twenty-four years old and was quite comely. She was evidently of the upper class and had wounded my amour propre by not recognizing me for a social equal instead of mistaking me for a thief. She opened the negotiations.

"Are you a tool of George Norton?" she asked abruptly.

"I haven't the pleasure of the gentleman's acquaintance."

"You must have seen his name on the letters. They were addressed to him."

"I looked at one address, which convinced me that the letters did not belong to me."

"Do you mean to tell me that you haven't read them?"

"I do."

"Then how did you know I would value them so far as to offer so much for them?"

"I didn't until you made your offer."

"Will you please tell me how you restrained yourself from reading the letters?"

"Other people's letters don't interest me."

"I should have read them had I been you."

"Then your standard of honor is different from mine."

"I have made a mistake."

"Several. Which one do you mean?"

"I have been engaged to George Norton. I was warned against him, but would not listen. I stole my letters, which he would not return. I supposed he had employed you to get them back for him."

"Does he employ gentlemen for such purposes?"

For the first time she looked ashamed. She dropped her eyes and fidgeted with the ring I was to be tried for stealing.

"I didn't observe you closely when you came out of my room. I see now I was very much mistaken. I ask your pardon."

"Now that you have begun where you should have begun before, at the beginning, we can get on rapidly. Permit me to apologize for having mistaken your room for mine. I was absorbed in a matter of business. I put your package of letters in my pocket without being conscious of what I was doing."

"I see. I have acted very hastily."

I arose and touched a button. Then I wrote on the back of an old envelope an order for the letters. When an attendant came I told him to send for them. In fifteen minutes he returned and handed me the package. I handed them to the lady.

"But I have done nothing toward withdrawing the charge," she said.

"You will. I have no fear of that."

"Why?"

"Because I know you for a lady, and a lady once convinced that I am a gentleman, not a thief"—

"Please don't."

"Would never think of charging me with being one."

"What shall I do to stop the thing?"

I advised her of the necessary steps, after which we went on with our chat.

"It seems to me," she said, "that I am the real thief in this matter."

"Why so?"

"I stole the letters from George Norton."

"That was not stealing. They belonged to you. You only took your own."

This had the effect to comfort her somewhat, though she still seemed much mortified at her treatment of me. I was not disposed to permit her to escape too readily from this mortification.

"I don't quite understand," I remarked, "why you thought it necessary to offer so high a price for your letters."

"I supposed," she replied shamefacedly, "that you were an agent of George Norton. I wished to induce you to give me the letters instead of giving them to him."

"In other words, I was considered not only a blackmailer, but a subject for bribery to turn against my employer."

She hung her head. Indeed, she seemed so pained at the position in which she had placed herself that I hastened to apply a balm to the wound.

"It was all a mistake," I said, rising, "for which you are sorry, as I am at having unwittingly trespassed where I had right to trespass. But I trust that it is a mistake that may give me a valued acquaintance."

I asked her where she lived, and when she replied that it was in a city not far from the one in which I resided I asked permission to call upon her when I went there. This she readily accorded, and I took it upon myself to go without waiting for anything except herself to call me there. I not only called once, but often, and finally persuaded her to do penance for mistaking me for a thief by marrying me.

And so it was that I narrowly escaped imprisonment for robbery, assuming later the chains of matrimony.

A Deal in Antiques.

A certain dealer in London, having, a number of alleged Chippendale chairs for sale, approached a well known nobleman and succeeded in selling the set for $5,000 to the latter. Later on the purchaser, being informed that the chairs were "faked," wrote to the dealer and demanded his money back. The wily dealer wrote back a hurt and offended letter to his patron, protesting that his honesty had been impugned, but to show his good faith he would be willing to pay 1,000 guineas to get the chairs back. So it was done, and within a few hours the nobleman's receipt for that amount was being held under the nose of an American millionaire as proof that the chairs had been bought from that well known collector, Lord ——. Of course the dealer must have his profit, and the American millionaire finally handed over a check for $12,500 and carried his bargain triumphantly across the Atlantic.

A Better Chance.

From a giant, ghost or goblin
I should do my best to flee,
But I'd rather have the trio
Than the wireless after me!
—Lippincott's.

The Main Loss.

"Did the specialists remove anything when they operated on Millyuns?"

"Oh, yes; about half of his income!"—Baltimore American.

Felt Good, Anyhow.

"She wears such great, big, ugly shoes
And such an awkward style!"
Ah, yes—and yours are number twos—
But see her happy smile!"
—Cleveland Leader.

A Possible Danger.

Bill—I see aviation socks for men are the latest things.

Jill—Gee! Isn't there danger of 'em coming down?—Yonkers Statesman.

An Invitation Withdrawn.

Come, fly with me—
Oh, I forgot
That bobbie skirt!
You'd better not.

Women in Local News.

Miss Ella George, of Sellersville, slipped on the doorstep and dislocated her ankle and is now confined to the house.

Mrs. John Yardley, of Doylestown, is recovering from typhoid fever. She is able to sit up a little and is growing stronger.

St. Stephen's Ladies' Aid Society, Perkasie, has collected over $300 and applied it to the redemption of building fund certificates.

Miss Georgia M. Conway, for 20 years matron at the Friends' Asylum for the Insane, in Frankford, died in the institution on Monday, after a short illness.

Mrs. Margaret Richardson Knipe, wife of Attorney I. P. Knipe, of Norristown, has been admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the United States at Washington. Mrs. Knipe read law in the office of Wanger & Knipe, of Norristown.

While shoveling snow at her home in Norristown last Sunday night, Mrs. Catherine Hill, 81 years old, fell dead on the sidewalk. She had just finished a hearty meal, and Coroner King found that exertion brought on acute indigestion and caused heart failure.

After being separated from their 17-year-old daughter for several years, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Babb, of North Wales, appeared in court at Norristown Tuesday, in an effort to get her to return. The girl informed Judge Swartz that she had a good home with friends here and had no desire to go back to her parents. The judge held the matter under advisement.

Jewelry and other articles valued at $1000 were taken from 6804 Greene street, Germantown, on Saturday night, during the absence of the occupants, the Misses Susan, Anna and Henrietta Murdock, who had gone to the Metropolitan Opera House, leaving the house in charge of a servant, Mrs. Ethel Hamilton. When the three sisters returned to their home they found the maid and jewelry missing. The police were notified.

Women of the east side of Germantown are industriously hunting for two pseudo-sailors who sold them "real Irish point lace" some days ago and then disappeared. The "lace" was smuggled into this country, so they said, and they had so much of it they would dispose of it at a sacrifice. Householders "fell for" the tale, and the result was that many yards were purchased at a good price, considering that the lace was the cheapest kind of an imitation.

TIMELY RECIPES

PRUNE SHORTCAKE.

Rub together one pint of flour, one heaping teaspoonful of baking powder, one-half of a teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of sugar and one-half of a cupful of butter. Add sufficient sweet milk to make a soft dough and roll out three-quarters of an inch inch thick. Bake in a moderate oven, split, spread liberally with butter and prune mixture and serve with whipped cream. Pick over and wash thoroughly one pound of prunes, cover them with cold water and soak for full twenty-four hours. Transfer to a double boiler and cook slowly until perfectly tender. Drain off the juice, add one cupful of sugar and boil to a syrup. Remove the stones from the prunes, cut them fine and stir them into the syrup. Pour over the shortcake while warm and let stand for about ten minutes before serving.

MARBLE CAKE.

This is made with a spice cake mixture for the dark part or one darkened with chocolate. For the former beat to a cream one-half cupful of butter and one of sugar. Divide this in two portions, using one for the dark part and one for the light. For the dark part add to the creamed butter and sugar, one-quarter cupful of molasses, one-half cupful of milk, two well-beaten egg yolks and one cupful of flour sifted with one teaspoonful baking powder, one-half teaspoonful each of cloves and cinnamon, and a quarter cupful of grated nutmeg. Beat thoroughly three or four minutes, adding a trifle more flour if the batter does not seem stiff enough. For the light part add to the creamed butter and sugar one-half cupful milk and one cupful flour sifted, with one teaspoonful baking powder. Lastly fold in the well-beaten whites of the two eggs and flavor with lemon or rose. Place a layer of the dark part in a well-buttered cake tin, then add a layer of the light, spreading it in with a wavy motion of the spoon. Proceed in this way until both the batters are used, having the dark at the top. Bake about forty-five minutes in a moderate oven.

A very entertaining minstrel show was given by the members of St. Paul's church, Bristol, in the parish house.

"NATOMA," AN AMERICAN GRAND OPERA.

to be perfectly natural for any composer, that is, to supply certain themes or leit-motifs, to the characters and their feelings. This method of writing opera has generally been ascribed to Wagner, but as a matter of fact it is as old as music itself; it is the natural thing to do.

"Wagner carried the process to a greater length than other composers have, that is all. Now my scheme is not exactly that of Wagner; that is a polyphonic weaving of certain motifs, constantly repeated and interwoven. I have used the themes symphonically, it is true, but when I want a broader melody I use that too, occasionally introducing melodies that are not compounded out of any previous material. There is often a dramatic reason for this. Suppose, for instance, that one of the characters is singing a song.

"However, my whole conception of opera is that it should primarily be based on melody.

"I am not introducing any novel instruments or instrumentation into the score. I think that the most perfect sounding score which has yet been produced in 'Die Meistersinger," and yet there are several of the commonest instruments which do not occur in it. I have used the old instruments and used them in the old way. I have not even introduced a concertina. There is one novelty, perhaps, in the use of the organ in the last act."

"I have composed the Natoma music, at least the greater part of it, out of fragments of Indian music, which I have collected and studied for some time past. However, I have pursued none of these melodies to their logical conclusion. If I used Indian music with all its orginal intervals and cadences it would become very monotonous, and so, of course, I have adapted it. But I have fashioned melodies by using fragments of this and that Indian theme.

"There is also the question of harmonization. Indian music is not harmonized, and the moment a musician harmonizes it he has made it into something different. I hope, however, to have achieved the result I was striving for, to suggest the Indian character. In two instances I have introduced Indian tunes almost verbatim, of course with my own harmonization. The first of these occurs in the dagger dance, and the other is a melody which Natoma sings in the third act. In one song of Natoma's I make the accompaniment lean heavily upon the flute, as I think that instrument more than any other suggests the nature of Indian music.

"These two Indian melodies which I have mentioned I do not think exist in any published collection. In one other instance I have borrowed a theme—when the Spanish colors are being hoisted the brasses play a melody, which I am told has been used for this purpose in Spain for several centuries. I got this tune from a Spanish bandmaster now living in Brooklyn.

"There is scarcely any prelude to the first act or to the second. However, there is a prelude to the third act, which is intended to represent the character of Natoma. Another interesting feature is the fact that after Natoma sings the opening air to the second act she is silent throughout the rest of the act.

"This work is American in every particular. I want that to be understood. I am not half so interested in the success on my own account as I am for the sake of the cause. I want this work to make such a success that the way of the American composer will be easy, that he will have no trouble in having his works produced. There is no reason why this should not be so. And I want it always to be said, even if 'Natoma' is sung in another language, which I hope that it will be some day, that it was originally written to an English libretto and that it sounds better in that language.

"There is one trouble with the American composer at present," he continued, "and that is that he cannot study composition with a great composer unless he goes abroad to do so. Now, in the Paris Conservatorie one can study with Massenet, Saint-Saens, or Widor, to mention a few. If you take a composition, organ, violin, orchestral, what not, to these men they can pick out its faults at once, because they have all written works for these instruments

"Until some American composer achieves enough of a success so that he can found a school here or teach in one, there will be little chance for the making of new composers. Another thing about studying in Europe is the fact that the pupils are not in a hurry. They are not forced to learn how to compose in a few months, or a year or so."

The librettist of Natoma, Joseph D. Redding, is a prominent lawyer of New York and San Francisco. He was the first president of the celebrated Bohemian Club of San Francisco and is the author of several of the grove plays which the club has given in the Redwood Forest.

Mr. Redding has set his story in the early mission days of California, when that country was still under Spanish rule. The first act is laid on the island of Santa Cruz, one of the Santa Barbara Channel Islands; the second act on the mainland in the plaza of the town of Santa Barbara, in front of the old mission church. The third act takes place within the church.

The story is that of a young girl, Barbara, the daughter of Don Francisco, who, having grown to womanhood, is returning to her home from the convent school, where she had been educated. She is young, rich, beautiful. There are two suitors for her hand. A young American naval officer, whom she prefers, and a Spanish cousin. There is a festival in her honor, with much singing and dancing. An attempt is made by the Spaniard to abduct Barbara, which is frustrated by the Indian girl, Natoma, a friend of Barbara, who in dancing the dagger dance, stabs the would-be abductor. The Indian maiden, the last of her race, afterwards enters a convent and the play ends with church like music.

SUES TROLLEY COMPANY

Turnpike Company Seeks to Recover Rentals and Damages.

Suit has been brought in the Bucks County Courts by the Danboro and Doylestown Turnpike Company against the Philadelphia and Easton Electric Railway Company to recover rentals, taxes and damages alleged to be due under the lease of the turnpike to the trolley company, made in 1901.

The turnpike company seeks to recover $10,000 damages, which it contends it has sustained to its property by reason of the trolley company failing to keep the pike in repair and safe for public travel. Claim is also made for $675 arrears in rentals and $55 for taxes. As a result of the condition in which the turnpike has recently fallen under the care of the trolley company it was condemned a short time ago and the tollgates thrown open for free travel.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Peoria, Ill.—"I wish to let every one know what Lydia E. Pinkham's remedies have done for me. For two years I suffered. The doctors said I had tumors, and the only remedy was the surgeon's knife. My mother bought me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and today I am a healthy woman. For months I suffered from inflammation, and your Sanative Wash relieved me. Your Liver Pills have no equal as a cathartic. Any one wishing proof of what your medicines have done for me can get it from any druggist or by writing to me. You can use my testimonial in any way you wish, and I will be glad to answer letters."—Mrs. CHRISTINA REED, 105 Mound St., Peoria, Ill.

Another Operation Avoided.

New Orleans, La.—"For years I suffered from severe female troubles. Finally I was confined to my bed and the doctor said an operation was necessary. I gave Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial first, and was saved from an operation."—Mrs. LILY PEYROUX, 1111 Kerlerec St., New Orleans, La.

The great volume of unsolicited testimony constantly pouring in proves conclusively that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a remarkable remedy for those distressing feminine ills from which so many women suffer.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS

Under a ruling of the Post Office Department, at Washington, which went into effect on January 1st., 1908, publishers of weekly newspapers are not permitted to extend credit to a subscriber for a longer period than one year. Names of subscribers who have not paid their subscription for a period of one year or more must be taken off the list or the publisher is liable to a penalty.

We are therefore sending out bills to all subscribers who owe a year or more, and have instructed our collector, Edwin Kirk, to call this ruling to the attention of those from whom he collects.

Prompt settlement is urged, or accounts must be placed in the hands of attorneys.

We have no choice in this matter as much as we would be willing to favor certain cases.

The SPIRIT must comply with this ruling of the United States Government.

THE ELECTION OF JAMES E. Martine as United States Senator from New Jersey is a great feather in the cap of Governor Wilson, and a triumph of decent politics over the sort of boss rule that dominates Pennsylvania and most of the States.

It shows what a first-class, able man can do in politics when he has the strength of character to stand up for a matter of principle.

It brings Woodrow Wilson to the forefront in his party and taken in connection with his election as Governor of a Republican state, strengthens his popularity before the best elements in all parties throughout the land.

Estimated to-day, he stands out strong as a Presidential possibility.

OGONTZ AND ASHBOURNE

DROVE HORSE UNTIL IT FELL

Fine Imposed on Owner and Driver for Overloading Animal.

Frank Timmons and Lewis Malony, of 60th and Market streets, Philadelphia, were fined $19.50 Tuesday by Magistrate Comly, of Ogontz, for cruelty to animals. Timmons drove a horse and wagon belonging to Malony from West Philadelphia to Horsham, Montgomery county, a distance of twenty-six miles, last Saturday morning, loaded the wagon with more than a ton of furniture and started homeward. The horse fell exhausted in the road near Jenkintown.

Timmons was doing his best to revive his animal when Miss Tacey Lenhardt, agent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, happened along, and immediately notified the society.

While Miss Lenhardt was busy at the telephone, Timmons, with the assistance of some men of the neighborhood, got his horse under way again and managed to cover the mile to Ogontz before he was stopped.

There the wagon and its contents were weighed and found to aggregate a load of 3,800 pounds.

Timmons was notified to appear with Maloney, his employer, before Magistrate Comly on Monday, but failed to do so. The two were accordingly arrested and given a hearing Tuesday night. After the horse was kept for several days at the hotel at Ogontz, he revived and was able to proceed with his load. The horse was Western one that had just been brought in and had not become acclimated.

Gold Coins.

Gold pieces are the only coins of the United States which are worth their face value intrinsically. A double eagle contains $20 worth of gold without counting the one-tenth part of copper.

Children in China.

In China children are brought up almost as if they were deaf and dumb. A Chinese boy or girl will sit in the presence of father or mother for hours and never say a word unless spoken to. The Chinese boy who would speak to a caller at the house unless he had permission would be considered a most impudent rascal.

"Dear heart!" murmured she.

And then he broke it, as men will.
He got some fives and ones and twos,
Appropriate for him to use.
He let them go one at a time,
Then woke one morning with a dime.
But not depressed—no fears or chills—
This fellow had some more large bills.

"ADVERTISING IN THE SPIRIT PAYS"

The PUBLIC SPIRIT of Hatboro, Pa. is the best paper in which to advertise a public sale of personal property. Why the SPIRIT? Because of its advantageous location and widespread circulation among the well-to-do class who have money with which to buy. It is not only read by all the people in a wide scope of country with Hatboro as a centre, but it goes to dealers in Philadelphia, Germantown and else where. If you want to reach people who attend sales, advertise in the SPIRIT.

The SPIRIT job department turns out attractive posters, on good paper with catchy display and cuts, at moderate prices, for prompt work.

We will make an advance announcement of the date, place and character of coming sales under this head free if we are given both the poster printing and the sale is advertised in our paper. In all other cases the charges for advance announcements will be 50 cents. Secure your date early so as not to conflict with other sales in the same locality.

MRS. LESLIE CARTER AT THE LYRIC

Mrs. Leslie Carter will be the attraction at the LYRIC Theatre, Philadelphia, for two weeks beginning on Monday, January 30th, in her new play, "Two Women," by Rupert Hughes, which has proved the most satisfying vehicae America's leading emotional actress has had in a number of years. Mrs. Carter is starring under the management of John Cort, who has supplied her with an exceptionally capable company of players, including Walter Hale, Harrison Hunter, Brandon Hurst, Helen Tracy, Lily Cahill, Mile. Andree Corday and about forty others. With the exception of Mr. Hale, who has succeeded Mr. Robert Warwick in the role of Count Remy de Margyl, the cast of principals is the same as surrounded Mrs. Carter during her recent highly successful engagement of six weeks at the Lyric Theatre, New York. Mr. Cort has given the play a very elaborate mounting.

The story of "Two Women" has to do with Count de Margyl, a man of noble birth, who has wasted two fortunes in dissipation. He takes up art as a profession and marries a little seamstress of lowly birth, Jeannette Moreau. Under her beautiful influence he regains his character and is making a brave effort to relieve the poverty that oppresses them. Just when fortune smiles upon him, she dies. Her half finished portrait and the remembrance of her lovely spirit remain with him. He lives in the companionship of the latter and in the hopes of completing the former.

Two years later he meets the other woman, Jeannine Bartet, at the Bal Tabarin, Paris. She is vicious and utterly selfish, but physically the exact counterpart of Jeannette. Remy hires her to sit as a model for the unfinished picture of his wife in the little home where Jeannette had lived so happily with him. The atmosphere of the place and the man's devotion to his wife's memory work a complete transformation in the life of Jeannine. She begins by worshiping the character of Jeannette, and her character is finally merged into that of Jeannette.

These two characters, the one sweet, pure and noble; the other the direct opposite, afford Mrs. Carter splendid opportunities for the display of her wonderful emotional acting. Particularly is this so in the character of Jeannine, where all the fire she has shown in her many other great roles is shown plentifully.

FIREMEN MEET

Plans Arranged to Secure a Chemical Wagon—New Members Added—Company Will Ask for Subscription.

The board of trustees of the Enterprise Fire Company held a meeting on last Friday evening and organized by electing F. E. Snively, president and Warren M. Cornell, secretary. It was decided to have letters sent out to the citizens of the town soliciting subscriptions for the purchasing of a chemical wagon, enabling the company to have better service for fighting fires and also to secure lower fire insurance rates on the properties in the town. The finance committee in conjunction with the board of trustees will attend to said matter. Every owner of property should aid in this worthy project. With this addition our company will be one of the best equipped in the State. When you are called upon give this important question your earnest consideration.

The monthly meeting of the Enterprise Fire Company was held on Monday evening and was largely attended. President William F. Wilson presided. Six new members were received and about $40 was turned in as dues and receipts from the dance held in Wilgus' hall. A full report of the Board of Trustees was read and approved. The auditors also presented their report. The following delegates were named to attend the meetings of the Lower End Firemen's Association during the coming year: Messrs. Paul Jones, Irvin J. Amber, Warren M. Cornell, William R. Craven and James P. Kearns. Votes of thanks were extended to the various committees, who have acted in several capacities during the past year. The company is now in a flourishing condition and ask every citizen of the town for their help in advancing the company to a higher standard of efficiency. The Board of Trustees: Paul Jones, F. E. Snively, John S. Leidy, C. C. Moore, Charles Goessler, Warren M. Cornell, James P. Kearns, William F. Wilson, Harry Wilson, Harry Hoffman, J. N. Watson and Samuel H. Gehman.

Miss Vera Wescoat is ill with pleurisy.

Miss Kate Lukens is able to be out again, after suffering from a fall.

Lydia Hallowell, of Hallowell, spent Tuesday with Miss Emma Lukens.

Henry McCluskey, of Warminster, was a visitor in Hatboro Monday afternoon.

Samuel Sheppard, of Moreland avenue, has been on the sick list the past week.

John B. Stevenson, of Abington, was a business visitor in Hatboro on Monday last.

Martin Raab has been on the sick list the past week suffering with a sore throat.

The Neighbors Club held an interesting meeting last Saturday afternoon at the Baptist church.

A supper was given to eleven of Stanley Detwiler's friends on Tuesday evening, in honor of his birthday.

Dr. Charles M. Seltzer entered a dog at the recent show in Philadelphia, which proved to be a prize winner.

Lambert Jones and family, of Trenton, and Russell Jones and family, and Mrs. Aaron Sourbeer were recent visitors of Pierson Jones and wife.

A large audience was present Sunday evening in the Baptist church, when four were received into the church by baptism, they were: Ethyl Neely, Anna Valentine, Samuel Buckman and George Pletscher.

Robert Brown was visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Brown, this week. Robert is engaged with his brother, George in erecting rows of handsome houses in the suburbs of New York City, where they have been quite successful.

Pastor F. C. Colby will preach in the Baptist church next Sabbath at 10.30 a. m. Subject, "The Root of the Whole Matter." The evening service at 7.45 will be principally one of song. The subject for the sermon, "The Young Man That is Different." All given a welcome.

Leslie Craven and Pearl Weiss were married in the Baptist church last Wednesday evening at seven o'clock, in the presence of the immediate families. A reception followed at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Weiss, of Warminster.

A testimonial dinner was given last Saturday night to the Rev. Dr. George H. Hemingway, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Camden, in the Y. M. C. A. building. The function was under the auspices of the men of the congregation, and covers were laid for 150 persons. Dr. Hemingway is a frequent visitor to Hatboro, where he is known and esteemed.

John Finney, of Southampton, was in the borough on Tuesday on business.

Wide awake housewives will be interested in the announcement of H. J. Morris, on this page. It is a money saving chance.

Elias Krewson, who is building the new house for Calvin Fitzgerald, on Moreland avenue, west of the railroad, has the building ready for the plasterers. Work was started on the property after New Year's and it has been rushed forward and will be ready for occupancy before the first of March.

A telephone lineman, named Evans, a resident of Newtown, had one hand badly burned by coming in contact with a live wire in the borough on Friday. He had climbed a pole on lower York street, when he inadvertently took hold of a live wire, heavily charged by contact with an electric light or trolley wire. His hand was burned instantly and he was thrown to the ground. He was taken to Moore's hotel and later revived and sent home. His escape was a narrow one.

Several handsome trees were cut down along York street recently. Two or more on the Butterworth property to make room for a store building and one in front of the gas office to make room for improvements to be made to this building. In both cases it seemed necessary to do away with these handsome trees, but there are cases when trees are cut down without apparent reason, and this should be avoided as much as possible as it is the handsome shade trees that attract the city buyers of real estate and makes our town inviting to outsiders, enhancing the value of all the properties in the borough. Our woman's club might consider ways and means to encourage tree planting upon the streets.

TRIED TO WRECK TRAIN

Two Dreshertown Youths Arrested on Above Charge by Railroad Officer.

Special Officer Phipps, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, arrested William McMullin, aged 18 years, and Otto Hepplie, aged 18 years, both of Dreshertown, charged with driving a spike between a switch-point and the north rail on the west-bound track of the Cut-off railroad, at Dresher They were given a hearing before 'Squire Rhoads, of Fort Washington, and committed to jail in default of $600 bail for trial at court.

The spike was noticed by the track walker early Saturday morning and he immediately notified the railroad officials, who detailed Officer Phipps on the case. He found that the spike had been placed and that a train had run over it, tightly wedging it between the switch point and the track and railroaders say that had another train run over it, it would surely have been derailed and thrown over the embankment at the point.

At the hearing McMullin confessed that he drove the spike assisted by Hepplie, but neither of the boys would give any reason for their vicious act.

The boys could not secure bail and they were taken to jail to await trial at the March term of court.

A TURTLE MONUMENT

Bucks County Historical Society Wants to Erect One to Indian Chief.

Private ownership of a historic site has prevented the erection of a memorial in Bucks county, where the enterprising Historical Society provided a bronze tablet as long ago as 1902 to mark the supposed grave of the great Indian chief, Tammany, but has not yet been able to place the tablet in position, as the owner of the property would not grant permission unless the society bought the land. The grave is near the banks of the Neshaminy creek, in New Britain township, a few miles from Doylestown. Traditions say that about 1750 the chieftain was on his way to Philadelphia with a party of Indians, when he became sick at this spot, and when his companions abandoned him he killed himself with his hunting knife. People of the vicinity who buried Tammany marked the grave with a slab of slate. Some 50 years ago, it is said, the owner of the land built this slab into the wall of a new barn. Henry C. Mercer, president of the Bucks County Historical Society, has revived the effort to have the grave marked, and he suggests that as Tammany belonged to the Turtle clan of the Lenapes, an enormous turtle, made either of earth or concrete, be placed over the grave. The idea was suggested to Mr. Mercer by certain remarkable Indian mounds in Wisconsin, which are formed in the shape of animals.

A bell made in Boston will be placed in the belfry of St. Patrick's Catholic church, Norristown, pitched to the key of G, which is higher than the other church bells in town.

Seven residents of Doylestown township who organized the Sandy Ridge Telephone Club have their line erected and in operation. The line extends north to the Ferry road. The subscribers are Joseph Clark, Charles Rumpf, Harrison Hibbard, A. H. Clemens, Daniel Myers, William Hallman and Isaiah Rickert.

Some of the members of the Lutheran church at Mainland, Montgomery county, are hauling stone for a new church. Already over 100 loads have been hauled.

He gets a witticism new,
Proceeds to gloat
The while he works the same into
An anecdote.

The witticism makes a hit,
Is none the worse
For next appearing as a bit
Of timely verse.

The treadmill on forever hums
For scribbling folk.
The witticism next becomes
A two line joke.

And when the joke is quite as gray
As Mary's lamb
From it is fashioned some fine day
An epigram.
—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The fireman was shoveling coal into the engine. "I just happened to think," said he to the engineer, "that this coal is soft because it comes from the tender." Whereupon the whistle wailed softly, and even the railroad ties were board.—Boston Post.

Soon with the ancient, odorous goat
Hike for the cellar, dark, remote.
There he'll defy the wintry storm
And eat the coal to keep him warm.
—Chicago News.

A wizened little man charged his wife with cruel and abusive treatment. His better half, or in this case better two-thirds, was a big, square jawed woman with a determined eye. The judge listened to the plaintiff's recital of wrongs with interest.

"Where did you meet this woman who, according to your story, has treated you so dreadfully?" his honor asked.

"Well, judge," replied the little man, making a brave attempt to glare defiantly at his wife, "I never did meet her. She just kind of overtook me."—Argonaut.

She will not wear a bobble skirt. She says the style is much too pert and that no woman of good taste would so dehamonize her waist. Besides, she says she thinks the style will last for a little while, because to any one it seems the fad is going to extremes. When'ere her hobbled sisters pass she only sighs and says: "Alas, how can a lady of good sense incase herself in that pretense?
Just see her trip and wabble by! Would I appear in that? Not I! And how the horrid men folks stare at her as she goes here and there. Oh, if she knew just what they said I know she'd blush a rosy red. Besides, the style is awkward too. I don't care if they claim 'tis new." And so she carefully explains her preference for fuller trains and for a petticoat that's wide and will not be with gles eyed when she is tripping down the street. Besides, you see, she has LARGE FEET!
—Life.

"What's to prevent me from kissing you?" demanded the bold lover.

"My goodness!" exclaimed the girl. But it didn't.—Smart Set.

The bobble skirt so narrow is
In spots we scarce can find it.
There's one thing sure—poor man would have
A job to hide behind it.

PERSONAL AND SOCIAL.

AN EDITOR'S PIPE DREAM.

His head bowed on his ink stained hand.
No wrinkles creased his brow.
A smile was playing round his mouth,
For he was dreaming now.

Before him pranced a turkey fat.
It was a Christmas gift.
It was of such proportions vast
The bird he could not lift.

Next rose before him a great wad.
It was his bank account.
Delinquents had all mailed a check
And paid the full amount.

Last buzzed an auto to his door,
And on it tacked this card:
"The town presents this car to you Because you've boosted hard."

But, oh, alas, when he awoke
These sweet dreams came not true!
Come, brother, shed your tears with me
While I tell all to you.

First, on his desk an old skinflint
Some wormy turnips laid
And coolly said: "There, now we're square.
My sub. is overpaid."

Then came big bills, then came some more.
They poured in like wildfire.
Then came the message, "Ink's gone up,
And paper, too, is higher."

Then, last, four preachers bounced right in
And licked him like the dickens
Because he said when they were round
The folks should watch their chickens.

Then that poor soul from out the wreck
Cried: "O ye gods afar,
Was ever there an editor
Born 'neath a lucky star?"

A voice replied from out the blue:
"Lift up thy weary head.
If they don't pay you while you live
They'll praise you when you're dead."
C. M. BARNITZ.

Utterly Wretched

Nervous Prostration Long Endured Before Remedy was Found.

Miss Minerva Reminger, Upper Bern, Pa., writes: "For several years I had nervous prostration, and was utterly wretched. I lived on bread and beef tea because my stomach would not retain anything else. I took many remedies, but obtained no relief until I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, when I began to gain, at once. Am now cured."

Pure, rich blood makes good, strong nerves, and this is why Hood's Sarsaparilla, which purifies and enriches the blood, cures so many nervous diseases.

Miss Irene Garrett, of Philadelphia, spent a few days of last week at the home of her uncle, A. L. Spencer.

Miss Sarah Cummings and Miss Laura Kenderdine, of Stoopville, were visitors at J. M. Vansant's on Saturday.

A south-bound freight train set fire to and completely burned a lot of sweet corn fodder belonging to J. Monroe Vansant on Thursday of last week.

McKINLEY

Eloise Lang is on the sick list. His many friends hope to see him around again soon.

John Brynes, who has been suffering for several months, is reported to be seriously ill.

Mr. Webster and family have moved from Osceola avenue to Mr. Curley's house on Cypress avenue.

Mr. Flanagan has moved to Ogontz. He formerly lived on Woodland avenue. He is reported to be having an attack of walking typhoid.

The new brick house near the Township line, on the Haines tract, is completed and ready for occupancy. It failed to secure the bonus, having been delayed over the specified time.

The regular meeting of the fire company was held Tuesday evening, when the newly elected officers took their respective positions. Speeches were called for and the meeting took on the nature of a love feast. It was one of the most interesting held. John Zane has built a closet for the storing of utensils necessary for banquets, etc. A closet has also been built for storing the banner, flags, etc. The new directors have started a series of means to raise funds by arranging for a benefit at the Grand Opera House during the last week of February, and new life seems to have been injected into the members, which promises well for the coming year.

Food for reflection is a poor substitute for a square meal.

The post office inspector was in the town on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, looking over the ground as to the advisability of moving the post office to more suitable quarters. At this writing we are not able to state what the outcome of his visit will be, but we trust that it will suit all parties concerned.

DECLARED VALUE STANDS.

Judge Rules Shipper Can Only Recover Amount in Contract.

A decision of interest to shippers generally was rendered Monday by Judge Weand at Norristown, in the case of Horace M. Geyer, a drover, of Centre Point, who brought suit for $250 against the United States Express Company, damages claimed for the loss of a horse while in transit.

The horse fell from its car and was killed while the train was in West Virginia.

At the trial Geyer contended that the loss of the horse, "through gross negligence, according to the law of West Virginia, where the accident occurred, made the company liable for the value of the horse, $250, without regard to valuation of $100, afterward placed." The express company offered no evidence, but relied upon the law that recovery must be limited to the declared value of the horse. It was agreed that the court should direct a verdict of $250 for Geyer, reserving the question of law, whereupon the express company excepted and asked for judgment and a new trial.

The request of the express company is refused in the opinion, on condition that Geyer return to the express company all of the $250 verdict above $100 and costs within ten days.

Letters testamentary have been granted in the following estate: Ellen Shaffer, Upper Dublin, to George B. Shaffer and Amanda Smith. Estate divided among her family.

John Perry, of Lansdale, was discharged from Norristown jail Monday afternoon by order of the court. He had been arrested on a charge of desertion and non-support, preferred by his wife. The two had agreed to live together again, and on the strength of this promise Perry was discharged from jail under his own recognizance of $200.

JOY RIDERS HIT YORK ROAD CAR

Motor Wrecked When Collision Occurs, but Three Men in Car Escape Serious Injury.

A joy ride in an automobile ended in a collision with a north-bound Willow Grove trolley car on York road, above Spencer street, at one o'clock Wednesday morning.

The trolley was thrown off the track and the automobile, a touring car, was wrecked. The three occupants of the automobile and the passengers on the trolley were bruised and severely shaken up but none were seriously injured.

Bramwell, a policeman of the Branchtown station, who was thrown from the back platform of the trolley, promptly placed the three motorists under arrest and they were later given a hearing before Magistrate Fitzpatrick.

The arrested men are Charles W. Schuh, twenty years old, of 30th street, above Girard avenue, John Sail, twenty-one years old, of Race street, above 50th, and George Clocker, of Newkirk street, below Jefferson. Schuh was held under $500 bail for court and Sail and Clocker were given thirty days each for disorderly conduct.

According to the police the automobilists had been drinking, and it is alleged that Schuh, who was driving the car, was unable to confrol the steering wheel of the rushing machine.

Harry P. Sauers, 1216 N. Broad street, the owner of the car, appeared at the Branchtown station later and explained that the motor car had been taken out of the garage without his permission, and, moreover, that Schuh, who was only a helper and not his regular chauffeur, had been frequently warned by him not to touch the car.

"Irrespective of the smashing up of the machine," said Mr. Sauers, "I am truly thankful that no injuries resulted from the boy's foolish escapade."

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS.

WOMEN AS GREAT FARM OWNERS

Mrs. Virginia Ann King, of Texas, Owns a Tract of Over One Million Acres—Part of a Spanish Grant as Big as Rhode Island—She is a Famous Producer of Blooded Horses and Cattle—Mrs. Rhoda May Rindge has Vast Possessions, Including Valuable Forest Lands, as Well as Farms.

One of the greatest land owners in America and most successful farmers in Texas is Virginia Ann King, born at Greenville, Texas, and still a resident of that prosperous agricultural county town.

Mrs. King's million-acre farm is made up of dozens of the most fertile and best cultivated homesteads in Hunt, Jones and Shackelford counties, provided with the most modern improvements and tilled after the most up-to-date methods.

The late Captain Richard King was a Mississippi River pilot who freighted goods for General Taylor during the Mexican War and took as part payment for his services an old Spanish land grant on the frontier. At first it was a doubtful proposition, for when Captain King went to claim possession of his new estate he found it tenanted by outlaws and renegades of every description, and he speedily realized that he should have to fight for his rights or relinquish them. He had acquired a taste for adventure in his river operations, and the opportunity to conduct a small war on his own account appealed to him. So he recruited a band of those who were of the same way of thinking and proceeded to fight his way into full possession of his domain.

He succeeded in dislodging the armed interlopers, and then began at once to develop his property. The grant as it stood originally was considerably larger than the State of Rhode Island, with a soil so deeply fertile that no artificial enrichment would be needed for more than one generation.

The administration of this princely estate fell into capable hands. Captain King had married a Texas girl who had made farming on a mammoth scale her chief study in life, and at his death she assumed the reins without a doubt as to her capacity to undertake the task.

"It never occurred to me that there was anything else for me to do," Mrs. King said recently. "Of course, I realized that it was going to keep me busy, but I was used to that and liked it. I suppose if I had stopped to consider that it was seventy miles from my front gate to the veranda of my house I might have faltered, but my mind was so full of getting 5000 acres of grain harvested and off my hands that I didn't have time to think of the size of the field."

Before a year had passed Mrs. King had demonstrated her ability to conduct farming on a larger scale than had been the practice even in Texas. To the great surprise of her competitors in the market, she not only kept the famous King ranch up to its usual standard, but launched out into new fields with a boldness that subjected her to much criticism from those who were less keen witted. During her husband's lifetime, cattle raising at the ranch had been confined practically to native stock, although Captain King had contemplated stocking some of his farms with improved breeds. This scheme was put into execution by his widow, who began by making a considerable outlay of capital for imported stock, contrary to the advice of many local cattle men, who had convinced themselves that there was no money in fine stock bred in Texas.

Again Mrs. King showed them that they were in error. Her experiments with imported Herefords and Devons were so successful that in time she abandoned the business of fitting native stock for the beef market and confined herself exclusively to the breeding of blooded cattle and horses. For many years the King ranch has stood foremost in the rearing and marketing of this pedigreed stock, and its herds of Herefords and shorthorns are the largest and finest in the world, and the high-bred horses which, are the product of the King stables are famous for their quality in all the marts of the world.

To those who meet her for the first time Mrs. King is a distinct surprise. It is not easy to recognize a woman of her unique achievement in the dignified and retiring matron who greets a visitor with a timid smile and proceeds to talk agreeably and most intelligently on any subject outside of "shop." Her voice is low and instinct with that quality which has come to be known as cultured. Were one required to place her geographically, Boston or its vicinity might suggest itself, but Texas—never. She has traveled much and has been a keen observer. She has a beautiful winter home at Corpus Christi, Texas.

In recent years Mrs. King has had an efficient aid in her son-in-law, R. J. Kleberg, who has also learned the trick of combining banking with agriculture at a profit. Mr. Kleberg is president of the industrial congress of Texas, a non-political organization devoted to the upbuilding of the Commonwealth. It was on the great ranch managed by Mr. Kleberg that the pioneer scientific investigation into the Texas cattle fever was made, resulting in the discovery of one of the most valued antitoxins used in stock raising.

Another American woman whose landed domain is far-reaching is Rhoda May Rindge. Left a widow with an estate so vast in acres that she did not know how to estimate it, Mrs. Rindge resolved to become a practical farmer. It took her the better part of two years to locate and inspect all her holdings. Much of her land is in the semi-tropical regions of the Southwest, some of it across the Mexican border. She discovered that she was the proprietor of vast forests of mahogany and other rare woods, and she began immediately to take steps to put this product on the market. She also established a system of tenant farming on some of her Southern estates, the soil of which is adapted to the cultivation of pineapples, bananas and cocoanuts, and has been active in bringing into use a wonderful Mexican fibrous plant as a rope-making material.

Until the death of her husband, the late Frederick H. Rindge, of Cambridge, Mass., this million-acre woman farmer knew nothing of the practical side of agriculture. Her husband, who was a fellow student of Theodore Roosevelt at Harvard, was interested deeply in aboriginal research, and devoted himself to the collecting of material illustrative of the history and customs of primitive American races. During his lifetime Mr. Rindge was regarded as an authority on such matters, and he bequeathed his unique collection to Peabody Museum. Although he had come into possession, by inheritance and otherwise, of vast tracts of land in the United States and Mexico, he took little interest in agriculture from a practical standpoint. It remained for his wife to convert his valuable but unprofitable landed interests into money-makers. This she has done in less than five years. In that time she has made herself one of the wealthier women in the world.

TIMELY TOPICS OF PLANTS AND PESTS DISCUSSED WEEKLY

By H. A. Surface, State Zoologist

SUPERVISION OF ORCHARD WORK IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Over eleven hundred applications have been made to Prof. H. A. Surface, State Zoologist, Harrisburg, Pa., requesting him to accept orchards belonging to the applicants for the purpose of supervising or directing the proper management throughout the year, to show how to control pests, and manage the orchard in such a way as to produce the largest, most perfect and most profitable crop of fruit.

In response to these requests Professor Surface is sending his experts into every County of the State, arranging a systematic tour of the proffered orchards in each county, in such a way as to give the individual service requested.

The inspector, in every case, is a man who knows his business, and has had proper scientific training under Prof. Surface, as well as very considerable practical experience in different orchards. During the past two years the Demonstration Orchard work in Pennsylvania has proven to be such a decided success and source of revenue for the owners, that hundreds have been forced to acknowledge the value of this work, and have, therefore, applied for the assistance of the inspector to meet their own needs.

The inspector appoints a time when he will be at a designated orchard, and is there on time regardless of weather. He looks over the premises, determines whether any serious pests, such as San Jose scale, are present, and tells the owner just what to do to each tree according to its individual needs. He talks, primarily, on the subjects of spraying and pruning, and, secondarily, on the entire subject of orchard management. He examines and tests spraying apparatus, suggests features of improvement, shows how it is to be used to secure the greatest efficiency in results, shows how to make and apply the best spraying mixtures, shows how trees should be pruned according to their age and individual needs, and gives a written plan for the details of the spraying, cultivation and other features of orchard management during the entire year.

As a result of this kind of work last season tens of thousands of bushels of first class fruits were added to Pennsylvania's production, and thousands of persons are encouraged to plant more trees, either to enlarge or replace the old orchard, which in many cases has been totally destroyed by San Jose scale, or to start a commercial orchard.

The extensive nurserymen say that more trees have been planted in Pennsylvania during the past year, and more orders are now waiting to be filled in this State than in any other State in the Union. This is chiefly because of the activity of the persons officially engaged in advancing the interests of orcharding in this State, with special reference to the suppression of pests and the production of perfect fruits. It has recently been proven that Pennsylvania can produce the finest fruits of the world, and acting upon this knowledge orcharding is going forward with tremendous bounds.

The orchard inspector not only makes examination of the Supervision Orchards but he also holds evening meetings in convenient halls or school houses throughout the County, discussing the subject of spraying, and other features of orcharding, with illustrations. Hundreds of these meetings will be held during the remainder of the winter, commencing again the latter part of January, and as they will be for the one evening only, persons in the vicinity where they are held should lose no opportunity to attend them. Announcements of the exact place and time of meeting will be made by local posters and through the local press.

This week the inspectors and demonstrators are attending the great fruit growers' meeting in Harrisburg, and are receiving further instructions from their chief, Prof. Surface, in order that they can be equipped with the latest and best practical information, which they, in turn, carry to all rural districts of our State. This is ideal and important service, of which every farmer should avail himself.

"Two bottles Cured My Rheumatism"

"I have been a sufferer from rheumatism for about two years, and have used many liniments and patent medicines which gave me no relief. A lady friend of mine told me she had used your Liniment and found relief at once. I got two bottles and they cured me. I think it is the best Liniment a person can have in the house. I shall always keep a bottle in my house as long as I can get it."—MRS. E. R. WALLACE, Morrisons, Va.

The funeral, which was private, was held on Friday, interment being made at Hillside cemetery. The home is under quarantine.

The home of George Herman, who resides in one of the Countess Eulalia's houses on Church road, was robbed of a considerable sum of money on Sunday night. The thieves made their escape and have not as yet been apprehended. Mr. Herman is an employe of the Hammond hatchet mills and the loss represented a large portion of his savings.

Robbers entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. John P. Rice on last Saturday evening, and got away with a quantity of silver and other articles of value. Mr. and Mrs. Rice and family were away at the time, it being early in the evening when the robbery occurred. This is the third robbery, or attempted robbery, in a very short time, and as a result, a petition has been prepared and signers obtained for the purpose of having an officer in the village proper at all times during the night. The petition will be presented at the meeting of the township commissioners in February. If you have not signed the petition, you owe it to yourself to do so.

The court is being petitioned for the appointment of H. B. Weachter as burgess of Lansdale, to succeed the late J. Wilmot Harvey.

Important Point

One of the most important points to be considered in the selection of your bank is

ITS ABILITY TO SERVE YOU

THE HATBORO NATIONAL BANK bases its claim to your account and business upon, not only its ability to serve its customers, but upon its willingness to do so.

Without charge we collect your checks and drafts, issue to you New York or Philadelphia drafts, payable anywhere. We keep your money on deposit safely, pay you THREE PER CENT INTEREST, if funds are allowed to stand upon certificate, and pay money out instantly upon your order without quibble or red tape.

We will keep your valuable papers, such as insurance policies, bonds, mortgages, notes, etc., safe from fire, thieves or other loss, in a private box for a small annual rent fee.

We will loan you money upon satisfactory security.

And above all we remind you that carrying an account in an old established, carefully managed, home bank is notice to the world at large that you are a person of standing in your own community.

At your service always.
